Category:Lists of websitesQ: Excel VBA Time Format I am attempting to format a cell in Excel so that it displays the current time. Here is what I have tried, but it does not display the current time in the format that I want. 'Time Range("H4") = Timestamp Range("H4").NumberFormat = "@" 'Special Range("H4") = "Special" This makes H4 display "Special", but no the actual time. I am trying to format the following column H4 based on the time in the column F4. I do not want the time displayed, but just a reference to the time for the current event. A: You could format the cell directly. For example: Range("H4").NumberFormat = "@" I believe Timestamp is a data type. In order to display the time you need a function to do the formatting from the date returned by Timestamp. For example: Function getTime() As String getTime = Format(Now, "dd hh:mm") End Function Then Range("H4").NumberFormat = getTime This will take the Timestamp value that is in F4 and return it as a string and then format it. I don't know if this works for all variants of Timestamp, but it worked for the one I use. If not try to update your question with the exact variant and people can update the answer.
